2025 SMALL-SHIP EXPEDITION CRUISES

Why Adventure Canada?

Adventure is our first name! Since 1987, our small, family-run company has been taking travellers in small groups, to places “off the map.” Why? Simply put, to experience the state of mind and heart, that is adventure. Adventure is the time we spend on the land, and on the water, among wildlife, and in communities. Adventure is also the time we spend aboard expedition ships, in the company of knowledge keepers, and recognized experts. Adventure is making our journeys together meaningful. And adventure is the appreciation that we all take home with us!

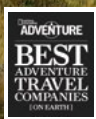

Canada is our second name. We made our name with small-ship expeditions to the Canadian Arctic. We’ve kept that name as we’ve expanded to unique natural and cultural destinations worldwide. We feel it still fits. We’re a Canadian-owned company. We travel primarily with renowned Canadian guides and experts. And even as we travel to far-flung places, most of our guests are Canadian. Yet those from other places tell us they appreciate our “Canadian” ethos: casual and friendly, but with sincere attention to culture, wildlife, and learning—and regular doses of hilarity!

The Adventure Canada way has stood the test of time: travel in comfort, so that we can get outside our comfort zones, where the magic happens. It’s about adventuring, not just in Canada, but in what we think of as a Canadian way: curious, casual, engaged, and enthusiastic. Our returning guests tell us it’s one of the things they love about Adventure Canada and why they choose to travel with us again and again.

Cedar Swan
CEO, Adventure Canada

Some of the photos in this brochure were taken with telephoto (zoom) lenses and may appear closer to wildlife, ice, or archaeological artefacts than we really were. We always keep a safe distance and follow mandated regulations.

Territorial Acknowledgement

In Canada, we travel extensively through the Inuit homelands of Nunavut, Nunavik, and Nunatsiavut, as well as those of Innu, Beothuk, Mi'kmaq, Huron-Wendat, Abenaki, Wolastoqiyik, and Haida nations. We also visit Indigenous homelands around the world, including in what are today called Greenland, Costa Rica, Panama, Patagonia, Ecuador, Peru, and Tanzania.

We are grateful to the ancestors who cared for these areas and for the land defenders, water protectors, and guardians who continue to safeguard the ecosystems, historical sites, and spiritual places that we are privileged to visit.

Choices define who we are and what we value

When you choose Adventure Canada as your travel partner, you are expressing what you care about.

It matters that you travel with purpose: to explore, to learn, to connect, to grow. It matters that you travel with yearning: for adventure, for fun, for fulfilment, for authenticity. It matters that you travel with respect: for nature, for culture, for community, for ourselves.

It matters to us too. These are the values that shape us as a Canadian, family-owned company that has been leading extraordinary journeys for over three decades.

When you join us on one of our voyages, you are not just a tourist, but a traveller choosing to broaden your mind and deepen your understanding while refusing to let your world grow any smaller. Frankly, we aim to be the best expedition travel company in Canada, and we want you to choose us for the best reasons. Keep turning these pages and find the reasons that matter most to you.

It's All About Connecting

Come link arms with us and explore places that you dreamed about. Some say it's transformational. Perhaps it will be for you.

Your jaw drops in awe. Your eyes widen in wonder. You gasp in excitement. Though it's long past nightfall, and you have been roused from sleep, you stand enthralled on deck under the dance of the Northern Lights. It's a first! Here in the true north, under this boundless sky, above the Arctic Circle and the treeline—you feel a hypnotic bond with the place. You are fully immersed in this inspirational moment. You glance at the person next to you and there are tears of joy and wonder on their cheeks.

The singular purpose of an Adventure Canada expedition is to connect people—with nature's wonders; with rare wildlife; with the remote places; with local people, culture, and food; with history and science; with music and other arts; and with each other.

Restore Yourself with Nature

We call it Vitamin N. “N” for nature because it’s so good for you: for your body, for your brain, for your heart, for your attitude, for your peace of mind—and on an Adventure Canada expedition you get a megadose!

A large, jagged iceberg floats in the ocean. The iceberg is composed of several large, angular blocks of ice, with a prominent, sharp peak on the left side. The ice has a deep blue color, suggesting it is old and dense. The ocean is a dark blue, and the sky is a clear, light blue. In the background, there are faint outlines of mountains or hills on the horizon.

O f course, nature is everywhere, and we're part of it, but we tend to take it for granted in our routine lives. It's when we gaze upon a spectacle like a gigantic iceberg thousands of years old, or we feel the cushiony tundra underfoot, or lie at eye-level with a bed of mountain avens, that we can feel the importance of the bond. With humility, we remember that it's one earth.

Come sit on a tundra boulder dropped by a glacier ten thousand years ago, listen to the silence, feel the interconnection, and restore yourself.

We abuse land because we regard it as a commodity belonging to us. When we see land as a community to which we belong, we may begin to use it with love and respect. — Aldo Leopold

Wildlife Encounters

It's not just about the very special treat of seeing wild things, it's about finding the deeper meaning and bringing it home with us.

A group of people, seen from behind, are wearing bright blue parkas and are on a boat. They are looking out at a rugged, rocky shoreline with dark, jagged rocks and some reddish-brown vegetation. The water is calm and reflects the light. The scene is set in a natural, possibly Arctic or sub-Arctic, environment.

Wayne, the Zodiac driver whispered, “If we are all quiet and make no sudden movements, we won’t disturb the bear and might get a great view.” And we did! The bear on the shore of Eclipse Channel in the northern Torngat Mountains appeared completely relaxed and curious about these rubber boats and a bevy of blue coats floating past. It seemed like we were entertainment for the bear!

Wild things are the fabric of ecosystems and ecosystems sustain all life on this planet. We need them. But how do we cultivate the care to conserve and protect wildlife, especially species in remote areas? How can we develop the love and respect needed to advocate for the animals and plants that have no voice? How can we love that which we don’t know?

Direct encounters help—a lot. After an experience like this, you might feel touched and perhaps shifted a little. You might realize your privilege and accept some responsibility.

Whether I’m discussing our itinerary with the ship’s captain, guiding from the helm of a Zodiac, or briefing guests on what to expect tomorrow, I try to share my love for the wild in all our travels. I know what a privilege it is to take travellers to these hard-to-reach destinations, and I welcome the responsibility that goes with that. — MJ Swan, Expedition Leader and Managing Director

Cross-Cultural Connections

We foster emotional engagement that can lead to acceptance, understanding, and mutual respect.

At Adventure Canada, we love to connect people across cultures and within cultures. We want to have real and deep conversations; to be curious and amazed; to ask and answer questions; to learn together. We want to break down stereotypes and prejudices and build friendships and trust. We want to discover and celebrate the commonalities that unite us as humans.

Wherever we go, people from the local culture travel with us as part of the expedition team. These cultural educators, which could be Inuit, Scottish, Faroese, Icelandic, Newfoundlanders, or Labradorians, are aboard to allow you to go deeper than the throat-singing and drum-dancing, haggis and the highland dance. They are available every day of the expedition to share views and values, customs and traditions, history and arts, stories and song, language and laughs, and, oh yes—food.

We don't shy away from the concerns or challenges of the day either. Rather, we might have a panel discussion, or a sharing session, to bring them into the light.

These are chances for personal growth and change. By stepping out of our comfort zones, we can challenge ourselves and overcome fears and limits.

When we visit communities, we want the benefits to flow both ways. If we are not doing good for both the places we visit and our guests, we should not be in the business. We have built strong, lasting bonds with the communities we visit that are based on mutual trust and care. When we arrive at a local dock or shore, it's not uncommon for some of our local friends to greet us with hugs and smiles like we are family. We never feel unwelcome or intrusive. We help provide markets for creative works; we find opportunities for speaking and advocacy; we contribute to local charities and projects; and we support cultural outreach—on expeditions, at home, and around the world.

A large, rectangular iceberg floats in the foreground, its surface a mix of white snow and translucent blue ice. Travelling on the Water

When we take to the sea in a small ship, our floating home-away-from-home becomes a little community of like-minded souls sharing unforgettable experiences.

Nachvak Fjord, Torngat Mountains
National Park, Labrador

Water connects everything on earth. It opens the door to distant lands as it reveals secrets from the deep through the life on its surface. We travel upon it in a small ship with a fleet of nimble, rubber Zodiacs that allow us to explore the coastline with incomparable intimacy.

One of the best things about small ships is that you can make friends easily, and there's a family-like feel. When we land on shore, we're not a huge crowd that overwhelms the locals. We're a friendly group that can chat, laugh, and learn from our hosts. They appreciate our small size because they can focus more on showing us their home and culture.

The ship becomes your home-away-from-home. You can unpack once! That's it! With one base, there is no repacking as we move from one amazing destination to the next. Whale sightings are moments away from that restful read on your bunk.

Small ships can go where big ships can't. They can get closer to the shore, and that means less time on the water and more time on land. We want to make the most of every minute we have in these amazing places.

Our Zodiacs are the key to our exploration. They're super fun and easy to use, and they can handle any situation. They can take us to any kind of landing spot, whether it's a dock, a beach, or a rocky shore. They're strong and sturdy, so they don't mind bumping into ice, rocks, or sand. They can go fast or slow, depending on what we want to see. They can fit up to twelve people, they're safe, fun, exciting, and indispensable.

You don't have to worry if you've never used them before. We'll teach you everything you need to know, from how to dress to how to get in and out. We have a lot of experience, and we'll make sure you're comfortable and safe.

©Scott Sporleder

We never know what we might find

One thing you'll notice about travelling by sea is that sometimes things don't go as planned. We might have to change our itinerary because of strong winds, sea ice, or even wildlife sightings. But that's OK, because we're flexible and we want you to be too. We always put your safety, comfort, and happiness first. And sometimes the surprises are even more amazing than what we had planned! That's what makes expedition travel so exciting. We never know what we might find.

With years of experience and attention to detail, we guarantee a comfortable journey while also providing memorable stories for your return home.

Anthony is eighty-two and in good health. He walks every day but doesn't tackle the steep inclines that he once did. He wants to see the amazing scenery and capture it with his camera to share with his loved ones.

Grace is thirty-nine and fit as a fiddle. She runs and works out a few times a week. When we visit different locations, she wants to challenge herself physically while admiring the views.

Whenever we leave the ship, there will be something for everyone, whether you're like Anthony or Grace or somewhere in between.

Here's how you can decide what suits you best. Before each landing, we meet with the expedition leader, who tells us what to expect the next day. You will see maps and pictures of the places we'll visit and learn about the distances and the terrain. Then, for most landings, the expedition leader will offer you options with various levels of difficulty, from hard for those who want to push themselves, to easy for those who prefer a leisurely stroll near the landing site. Depending on where we are, you can go on your own or join a group. Whatever you pick, our expedition team will be around to help, should the need arise.

On the ship, you will also have options like attending a presentation, relaxing in the library, joining a workshop, breathing in the fresh air on deck, or curling up with a book in the cozy Compass Club. There's always something happening, but you don't have to join everything. It's also important to have some time for yourself.

Lifelong Learning in Great Company

Adventure Canada is a community of learners who love to explore and discover. We invite you to join our expedition team on a journey of lifelong learning that can transform your perspective and enrich your life.

Our expedition cruises are more than just vacations. They are active, immersive learning experiences that will enrich your mind and soul.

Discover how the Arctic's marine life is affected by the climate crisis. See how microplastics end up in Arctic seabirds. Learn about the folk beliefs in Scottish culture. Try some creative activities like printmaking, journal writing, knot tying, or Inuit beading. Listen to the stories of how Inuit communities in Inuit Nunagat were forced to relocate. Be amazed by the adaptations of polar bears to their frigid world. Improve your photography with some tips and guidance from an expert. There's so much to explore.

Our expedition team is built around local experts who know the land and the culture like no one else. Whether they are Inuit in the Arctic, Scots in Scotland, or Icelandic in Iceland, they will share their insights and their passion with you. We also have knowledge and skill specialists who can teach you about the geology, wildlife, history, art, and music of the places we visit.

They are not just experts; they are also great communicators who can make learning fun and engaging. They want to inspire personal growth and make your journey a life-changing experience. They'll encourage you to step out of your comfort zone, engage with the environment and the people, and challenge your perspectives.

You will have many opportunities to interact with our team members. You can join their presentations or hands-on workshops; you can tag along with them on a hike; you can share a chat over an afternoon coffee; and you can join them for dinner at our hosted tables where we just get to know each other a bit better.

At the end of a trip, a common refrain is: "It was the expedition team that made this experience so unforgettable."

Meet Susie Eryagotailak

Part of our Extended Family

Hailing from Kugluktuk, Nunavut Susie is a proud Inuk elder. An instructor at the Arctic College, Susie extends her language and cultural knowledge sharing with the Adventure Canada family.

"Language and culture are the roots of who we are, where we come from, and where we can go in the future," she says.

For Susie, there is no better place than being out on the land with nature. "One time when we were on the land with Adventure Canada's guests, some seemed to doubt that my people have lived there. I guess it seemed so empty to them. But it wasn't empty to me. Eventually, I found a broken qulliq on the shore, that proved my ancestors had been there. They even wrote a song about it! I didn't expect that!"

A Typical Day

"Good morning, good morning, good morning," comes over your cabin speaker in a soft tone so as not to jar you from sleep. The expedition leader proceeds to update you on where we are, the weather, and a bit on the coming day.

You might go out on deck to check the outside air before breakfast to determine the best way to dress and to take in the first views of land from the ship—a great time for some photos too. Then it's breakfast and back to your cabin to prepare for the landing.

You get called down for disembarkation, don your outdoor gear and lifejacket, and board your Zodiac. Once at the landing site, you are given an orientation on where you can go, what you might see, and the relevant timings. Then you are off, either on your own, or with your chosen hiking group. Landings vary in length from a couple hours to a half day, sometimes longer. You return to the Zodiac landing site at the designated time, go back to the ship and have lunch.

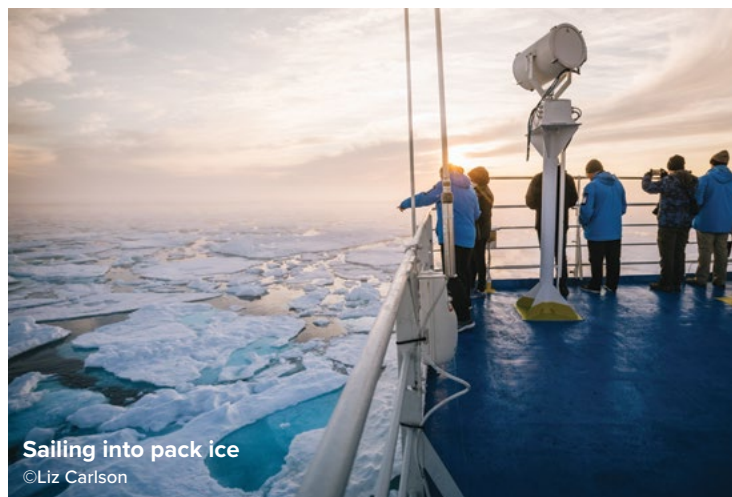

At any time, should you want to return to the ship, you can just go to the landing site where we have Zodiacs standing by to do the job.

During and after lunch, the ship moves to another destination. You can rest or take in whatever educational programming we offer. Depending on the distance we must sail, it might be a few hours before we reach the next stop. Whenever conditions allow, we make at least one landing per day.

On most days, after the landings are over and everyone is back on-board, you will be invited to the Nautilus Lounge for the "Gathering" where you may relax and partake in a libation and appetizers. During the Gathering, your host will lead you through some reflections on the day and the expedition team will expand on the history, archaeology, geology, etc. If you have an anecdote about what happened with you, this is a chance to share it. You might hear a funny story related to the day or you might listen to a song relevant to the local region. The Gathering ends with a briefing from the expedition leader on what's in store for the next day, ending just before dinner.

After dinner it's time for entertainment, perhaps live music from our excellent musicians, a movie, or a game. Then it's off to your bed as the ship slips through the night and next morning you begin again with a whole new set of experiences.

Laughter and Tears

Meaningful travel isn't just about visiting places; it's about the emotional tapestry woven through our journeys—the joy, curiosity, and connection that make each adventure unforgettable.

We are human because we feel things, from laughter to tears and everything in between. Our emotions wake us up and turn us on to our surroundings, transforming experiences into memories and giving them vibrance and value. It might be the humility you feel when you face the grandeur of a Greenlandic fjord at sunrise, or your compassion during a quiet conversation with a new friend. It could be the fun and silliness of our costumes during theme night, or the nostalgia from the heartfelt lyrics of a song from Barney Bentall. Anyone can show you the sights, give you a bunk, and keep you fed; it's the emotional involvement and enrichment that makes it an Adventure Canada expedition.

Make it a Family Affair!

Intergenerational travel is all about the magic that can happen when we connect and reconnect with loved ones in the places of dreams.

Sisters and brothers, parents and children, elders and youth, uncles and nephews, whatever works for you. When we break from our bustling routines, we find the time and space—both aboard and ashore—to invest in our time together, to dig deep, to rejoice in our bonds, to share the wonder, and to forge those lasting memories. Travel becomes meaningful from both the inner and outer experiences.

We know how to make expeditions great for young families with kids. Imagine the thrill of being with your child or grandchild when they see their first polar bear or iceberg! Imagine learning about climate change in the Arctic from the people who live there and from the people who have made it their life to study it. Aboard the ship, kids are a part of the program. They are invited to share their reflections and experiences; they can participate in workshops; and they can even go behind the scenes with the chef, expedition leader, and captain! We've even been known to run kids-only pirate Zodiac cruises!

For youth, travel can be a truly formative experience and can come at a critical time. It can correct a course or provide a newly discovered path. "Now I want to be a marine biologist!" We've heard that a few times.

To support your near-and-dear, we have family cabins, incentives for guests under thirty, and a casual, fun environment that welcomes all ages.

As a family, you couldn't make a better choice than to travel with Adventure Canada. In 2024, we were designated by USA Today as Best Cruise Line for Families!

Connecting with Yourself

An expedition with Adventure Canada can be busy, so finding quiet time to connect with yourself is a crucial gift that allows you to recharge, reflect, and reset. There's no better time and place to find solitude than with an early start to your day on the Ocean Endeavour. You can take your early-bird breakfast out on deck where you can watch the ship's rhythmic wake slide away. Or stay in the Compass Club and take in the views from the windows while you write in your journal. When you go ashore in a wild place, you can find a boulder off on your own and feel the transformative power of silence. Sit, smell, listen, breath.

Sustainability, Regenerative Travel, and Giving Back

Modern society is still a long way from having a sustainable relationship with the earth. We, at Adventure Canada, are committed to making it better.

Inspired by the values that drive us and by the support and loyalty of you, our guests, our commitment to sustainability starts with being honest about our impacts. We are very aware that all is not good. For instance, the ship and the planes we use emit a lot of gases and pollutants that contribute to climate change. Tourism can also influence local communities and cultures in ways we do not intend.

We take a two-pronged approach to these challenges: 1. mitigate or eliminate any harm we might do; 2. maximize the good, regenerative, improvements we can make along the way.

We take our direction from the Sustainable Development Goals developed by the United Nations (UNSDGs), and work around three themes: Climate, Nature, and People.

Climate

Here's what we are doing:

- › Offsetting (compensating for) carbon emissions by investing in carbon absorption and renewable energy generation projects. We will be climate neutral, with the assistance of offsetting, before 2030. Our goal is to continually reduce emissions until we achieve neutrality without the use of offsets.
- › Finding ways to improve the fuel efficiency of the ship(s) we charter.
- › Partnering with other operators and the shipping industry to share knowledge and solutions.
- › Educating our guests about climate change and what we are doing about it through our on-board programming.

Taste of Place

Fresh cod in a community hall with a crowd of locals, partridgeberry tarts in a popup on the back deck, mussels cooked in seawater over a beach bonfire, seaweed gin for your six-o'clock aperitif. These are examples of our Taste of Place program as it started on the Newfoundland Circumnavigation expedition a few years ago, and we're keeping it going! We won't predict when and where it will happen, but we guarantee it will awaken your taste buds and connect you even deeper with the land, sea, and people.

Food is a bridge connecting every aspect of our lives, from family to community, culture, and the earth's living systems. With Taste of Place, you will explore the regional food culture with an emphasis on quality, sustainability, and community. You will learn about harvest methods, traditions, recipes, and more. To bring the Program to you, we work with local partners, support Indigenous traditions, and contribute to local economies. Taste of Place elevates a culinary event to a regenerative travel experience through education, engagement, and local connection.

Nature

Here's what we are doing:

- › Improving ship-board standards as they affect air pollutants, chemical releases, invasive species, and sewage through a third-party certifier.
- › Reducing and managing solid waste to minimize single-use plastics, improve our collaboration with port facilities about sorting and disposal of waste, and continually investigating new on-board technologies.
- › Addressing the science and significance of these impacts in our on-board educational programs.
- › Inviting applicants to our Researchers-in-Residence and Young Explorers programs to focus on science and social projects that contribute to understanding and mitigating our own impacts.
- › Implementing a sustainable purchasing policy and program so that every dollar we spend improves sustainability.
- › Closely monitoring the sound of our vessel to minimize impacts on marine habitats.

People

Here's what we are doing:

- › Prioritizing Indigenous relations, by doing our part toward implementing the Calls to Action of the Canadian Truth and Reconciliation Commission. This will include Indigenous capacity-sharing across Inuit Nunangat, as we have been doing for over twenty years.
- › Welcoming and encouraging diversity in our guests and our team, including diversity in ability, colour, language, gender, and orientation.
- › Investing in the benefits, compensation, and other opportunities available to our own employees to ensure universally generous and equitable treatment.
- › Continuing our Taste of Place program where we draw attention to issues of food security and food sovereignty, and support local, grassroots solutions.

Giving back to the places we visit is another part of our regenerative travel program. So far, we have:

- › Donated approximately $500,000 to environmental conservation organizations and projects.
- › Provided over $1 million in in-kind support for our Researchers-in-Residence and Young Explorers programs.
- › Donated over $1 million in support to the Students on Ice Foundation.
- › Supported Project North, which has delivered over $370,000 of sports equipment to Inuit communities aboard Adventure Canada voyages.

Our Sustainability and Regenerative Travel Strategy is overseen by a dedicated Adventure Canada Director, reporting directly to our CEO. Each year we freshen this strategy with a thorough and self-critical assessment of our impacts, and we prioritize action where we have either particularly significant impact (to be mitigated) or particularly significant influence (to either mitigate harm or enhance our regenerative impact). Finally, we document all this in an updated strategy document, and a year-end impact report.

For more information, please contact Scott McDougall, Director of Sustainability and Regenerative Travel, at scott@adventurecanada.com

Jason Edmunds and Nalunaiqsijiit

As the only Inuk working as an expedition leader in the expedition cruise industry, Jason Edmunds is bridging cultures and empowering Inuit communities. Since 2019, he has been the lead instructor for the Nalunaiqsijiit Expedition Cruise Ship Initiative, a program of the Government of Nunavut in partnership with the Association of Arctic Expedition Cruise Operators.

"Nalunaiqsijiit" means "ones who clarify". In this role, outside of his work with Adventure Canada, Jason leads a team that is training and empowering Inuit to get involved and become leaders in the expedition cruise industry. Participants have opportunities to engage in cross-cultural connections and acts of reconciliation, through direct interactions with travellers visiting Nunavut from around the world.

Jason is helping to integrate Inuit voices and priorities into the industry. For this kind of work, and so much more, he was recognized by The Explorer's Club in 2024 as one of the "Fifty People Changing the World." Well done, Jason!

"It surprises me a little that I have become something of a role-model for Inuit youth since, as a younger person, I didn't see that coming! But now it is an honour to empower them to meet today's challenges while upholding our Inuit traditions and culture."— Jason Edmunds, Director, Expedition Leader.

Expedition team

Adventure Canada's story began in 1987, when two brothers (Matthew and Bill Swan) and a friend (Dave Freeze) decided that they wanted to form a travel business with a difference. Matthew talked about seeing the first photos of the earth taken at night from space and how they excited his desire to take folks to the parts of the world that were mostly dark—places like the Canadian Arctic, Eastern Canada, and Greenland. Matthew's infectious, zany spirit helped create a brand that attracted other colourful characters who didn't take themselves too seriously. And so, it began.

Matthew Swan Senior thrived on pushing the limits of this kind of travel. In 2016, he received a Lifetime Achievement Award from the Travel Industry

Association of Canada for his great pioneering work. The Award stated, "Matthew Swan has dedicated his life to meaningful travel experiences. His trailblazing work in Canada and the world's most remote and awe-inspiring places has notably facilitated the growth of tourism in Nunavut, Greenland, Newfoundland, Labrador, and beyond."

Now the company has passed to the second generation. Cedar, Alana, and Matthew James (MJ) now run the show along with Cedar's partner, Jason Edmunds, and MJ's partner Devon Bayly-Jones. That's a show that has been running for over three decades! This family is driven by their love of the places and the floating community, so the traditions continue. With their lifetime of knowledge, they are dedicated to the places and people that come together to create the travel experience. That includes the expedition team, the community hosts, and you, our guests.

Here's what you get when you choose this multi-generation family business as your travel partner:

- › Trust—the current generation have tallied up over seventy-five years of combined experience in the expedition travel business. Now that's something you can trust!
- › Commitment—to you the traveller; to the well-being of the communities we visit, which are much more than travel destinations; to the local people that are integral to our journeys.

- › Expertise and knowledge—with a focus on the long-term—we've been building year by year.
- › Passion for our product—we're here because we love what we do and we're in it for the long haul.
- › Stability—the world changes but we know how to ride with it.
- › Quality—every element of our expeditions has been time-tested, yet adventure is front-of-mind, and we know how to "go-with-the-flow".
- › Warm, personal service—we want to know you and you, us. It's all about true connections.
